

You want to enter a pact with Party B and you publicly announce this | Electoral Commission Election Pacts You are in the Election Pacts section Home Election Pacts View the navigation tree Go to main guidance section: Election Pacts What does an election pact look like? Important things to remember about election pacts Which laws might apply? You want to enter a pact with Party B and you publicly announce this You are Party A and you enter a pact with Party B but do not announce it or campaign You are Party A and enter a pact with Party B, you announce it but you don't campaign You are party A and enter a pact with Party B, you announce it and then campaign You are one of several parties who are part of a large pact across several constituencies You want to enter a pact with Party B and you publicly announce this Where you as a party are seeking a pact and there is public activity around this, spending is likely to be spending promoting your party. For example you might make a public call to other parties to join or arrange a pact to achieve an outcome. Your spending on this is likely to be spending promoting your own party. No other party is involved at this point. Last updated: 24 May 2021 Book traversal links for You want to enter a pact with Party B and you publicly announce this Which laws might apply? You are Party A and you enter a pact with Party B but do not announce it or campaign