

Public attitudes towards voting in the context of COVID-19 | Electoral Commission Search Public attitudes towards voting in the context of COVID-19 You are in the Our research section Home Our research In this section Public attitudes towards voting in England in the context of COVID-19 Public attitudes towards voting in Wales in the context of COVID-19 Public attitudes towards voting in Scotland in the context of COVID-19 Context During the pandemic we have conducted public opinion research, looking at attitudes towards polling station and postal voting in the context of Covid-19. This was undertaken in order to support preparations for the elections scheduled for 6 May 2021. Research was carried out at the following points across Great Britain: Scotland: August 2020, November 2020, February 2021. Wales and England: December 2020, February 2021. Related content 2019 electoral fraud data about electoral fraud in 2019 and view the data Public attitudes Read our reports about public attitudes towards voting Analysis of electoral registration data about electoral registration data Modernising elections research This qualitative research looks at public attitudes to voting and the information available around elections.